LIFE FOR MOORS KILLERS

By ARNOLD LATCHAM

JAN BRADY and Myra Hindley, whose trips to the moors meant murder, made their last journey together last night to begin life imprisonment.

MOORS MURDERS FILES RELEASE

EVIL MYRA PLOTTED TO ESCAPE JAIL WITH BRADY

MOORS murderers Myra Hindley and Ian Brady plotted ways to escape from jail by sending each other coded letters, it emerged last night.

The men were said to have kidnapped, tortured and killed five children in the 1960s. Hindley dismissed charges against her, which led to a re-socialisation process. But Hindley always maintained her innocence, although police say there is evidence against her.

Hindley, who is on long-term detention at a women’s prison, was tip-off that Brady had escaped from prison. Hindley, who is on long-term detention at a women’s prison, was given the address of the escapee in Manchester.

Although the exact nature of the conversation is not known, Hindley was told that Brady was planning to escape from jail. Hindley, who is on long-term detention at a women’s prison, was not given any specific details about the escape plan.

Moors Murders investigator Mike Jones told The Sun that Hindley may have been ‘strapped down’ during her stay in prison. The trial of the Kinsey family and their children will also be revealed in the book.
